

Freedom. It's simply American

Net Neutrality is essential to free speech, equal opportunity and economic innovation in America. The internet has become the street corner of the new age where a person can espouse their message. As it is today, the Internet has given the common man a voice which can be heard by millions. The web has become the ultimate media for communication and the spread of information. Through web sites, blogs and photo albums it allows families to stay close and involved in each others lives though they may be thousands of miles away.

As a consumer, we have the right to choose what content we want to view and how much or how long we want to view it. The Internet, the World Wide Web and its content should remain free and open. Net Neutrality is grounded in one of our most basic American principles; freedom. Please continue to ensure our freedom is protected.

Thank You,
John Anderson