

Definitely against it.

Net Neutrality is essential to free speech, equal opportunity and economic innovation in America. Since the FCC removed this basic protection in 2005, the top executives of phone and cable companies have stated their intention to become the Internet's gatekeepers and to discriminate against Web sites that don't pay their added tolls. This would be the same as paying a mob boss money to be able to stay open and run their businesses without obstruction and being scared to keep their doors open. Smaller up and coming businesses such as Etsy.com would have trouble keeping their doors open to their wonderful sellers, while eBay would be able to monopolize the market. Which is definitely not fair or just.

This fundamental change would end the open Internet as we know it. It would damage my ability to connect with others, share information and participate in our 21st century democracy and economy. The FCC must ensure that broadband providers do not block, interfere with or discriminate against any lawful Internet traffic based on its ownership, source or destination.
