

People have a right to a free Internet & speech

I would urge the FCC to support the people of this country by keeping Net Neutrality. This is no different than our rights to free speech, equal opportunity for everyone in America.

We should not be fooled by the top executives of phone and cable companies in their intention to become the Internet's gatekeepers or controllers as it would likely turn out.

We do not need large corporations dictating what sites we are allowed to visit.

One has only to look at the garbage currently provided by these networks controlled by these corporations and deem suitable for the viewing public.

The FCC should not make it possible for these media giants to discriminate against Web sites that don't pay their added tolls and follow their guide lines as dictated power hungry media moguls. I believe this in any other light would be considered extortion!!

It was my understanding that the FCC in the beginning was setup to protect and enforce the wishes of the people through our elected officials to ensure these corporations did not unduly influenced the viewing public.

The FCC must insure that the Internet remain open as it is today.

By limiting access in anyway would be interfering with our first amendment right to free speech by dictating who could speak and who could not.

James Williams
Eagle River, AK