

Finally, a way to suppress free speech.

After all the hard work large corporations have done to constrain and control dialog in this country, now the people demand easy access to the last bastion of free speech? I say NEVER. Oh sure they pay for the access they already have, and sure other countries have superior bandwidth at better prices, but in a free society, there has to be a way to charge more for less, it's the American way. We already pay the most so why shouldn't we have these beneficent corporations deciding what we can see? They need the money.

They need the money, not because they have any intentions of improving service. They need the money because that army of lobbyists aren't cheap, and freedom of speech is almost drowned anyway, someone should profit from it's dying breaths.