

A number of commentors have urged the FCC to move forward with approvals of AIS "B" radios in the United States. No substantial objections have been made, but no action has been taken. The issue is Safety of Life at Sea, not wrangling over bureaucratic sophistries. Should loss of life occur that could have been prevented by greater responsiveness from the FCC, the public will have been poorly served.