

There needs to be more choice in ISPs

I recently found out that my ISP, Comcast Cable, is limiting access to an internet protocol. They are, in effect, cutting off part of the internet. As an Internet Service Provider they need to be required to offer the whole internet, not the internet that is convenient or profitable to them. If they can't handle the whole internet with the government billions they received they shouldn't be in the business.

Please retain Net Neutrality. Any other option will outright kill the internet as it is today. Offering the whole internet at additional prices, limiting network protocols and effectively limiting communication across a medium that allows us to connect at previously impossible means.

Keep the internet open. Hold these ISPs responsible for their actions.

Luckily I have a choice of providers and I will be leaving Comcast Cable for a provider that provides the whole internet. Granted they are a bit slower, but at least I can access everything I have a need to. Many areas of the country still do not have choice. This is fundamentally what needs to change. The internet can not be allowed to run by a few corporations, allowing boardrooms to decide what should be accessible and what shouldn't.

Thank You
