

Wrong direction for the internet.

The internet has always been completely open and to limit people's freedom this way is simply wrong. Tiered internet access and letting companies control what websites WE visit is absolutely oppressive. If I want to visit a website to learn and educate myself, I should be able to do so without having to pay extra for an "internet encyclopedia service". Communications companies already don't get enough profit from the people of this country? They have to try to limit peoples' access so they can even get more money? This just opens the doorway for corrupt business practices. Tiered internet access would also shut down low-income families from being able to access material on the web. This would throw the United States BACKWARD compared to the rest of the world. While the people of many other countries can access all of the internet, we would be held back. Isn't this supposed to be a free country, where people have a choice to do as they want? Things like this limit peoples' freedom and if the wrong decisions are made, the United States will fall behind the rest of the world.
