

The Internet is a metaphor for Democracy

Net Neutrality is an essential supporting statement to this countries example of Democracy. How can we condemn oppressive governments such as China if our own country slowly erodes the rights of its own citizens? If we are going to talk the talk, we should walk the walk. There is nothing to fear from a free exchange of ideas and information. That is the way that America has led in innovation of the arts, in music, in technology, in intellectual development. Look around the world and you can see how the US has influenced everyone, everywhere. Now that so many goods are produced in other countries, so many resources imported from other countries, the freedom of the Internet and it's intellectual content, and the high concept of Democracy are our only remaining major exports. Once that is stifled and controlled, all America will stand for is McDonalds and Starbucks. Don't let that happen, we need to represent a higher ideal.
