

What good would it do for the people of America?

I know that major corporations have lobbyists that want you to do this, or want you to do that, but the FCC is an entity in the federal government that exists for the people, and I don't see how ending Net Neutrality would help the people. I know it would help the corporate lobbyists, but what I ask is: why are the American people rarely factored into the laws, and why is it controlled by the corporations?
