

corporate greed

Net Neutrality is essential to free speech, equal opportunity and economic innovation in America. Since the FCC removed this basic protection in 2005, the top executives of phone and cable companies have stated their intention to become the Internet's gatekeepers and to discriminate against Web sites that don't pay their added tolls.

This fundamental change would end the open Internet as we know it. It would damage my ability to connect with others, share information and participate in our 21st century democracy and economy. The FCC must ensure that broadband providers do not block, interfere with or discriminate against any lawful Internet traffic based on its ownership, source or destination.

I simply find this as another example of corporate America and cooperating government officials making an effort to 'criminalize' and punish honest citizens. If as much time and money was spent tracking down real criminals we probably could have 'free' internet. This all just seems to be another example of the rich getting richer and sticking it to the middle/lower classes.