

The telecommunications Act of 1996 may cause a lot of competition with local and long distance carriers. We can benefit from this because we can get better deals and services. It broadens the communications business and provide more choices rather than restrictions. More businesses can compete and we can get the "best" service rather than the "only" service. It should reduce the amount of major companies and bring in smaller ones.