Dear FCC:

I've been a Sirius subscriber for over a year now and have loved every day of it. It was a difficult decision at first because I'm a Penn State alumnus and love Penn State football games and MLB (Big 10 football and MLB are on XM), but also wanted to get NFL and NBA games (both on Sirius).

I chose to go with Sirius because I elected for those two sports over the others and the fact that Howard Stern had gone to Sirius led me to believe that it would soon catch up to and outpace XM subscriptions. Wouldn't it be great if I could have all four sports on my satellite radio? I would certainly love it. As far as it creating a monopoly, I don't see how that's justifiable. I recently purchased a new car and had to choose between packages for cars that included satellite radio in some, MP3 capability in some, yet every car came with an AM/FM radio. It seems to me that those three mediums are in competition with each other. I see no reason not to allow two financially struggling companies a chance to merge and gain the ability to be profitable for their shareholders and compete with the other media available today and what's to come in the future.

Sincerely,
