

This problem is getting worse take action!

I just saw a commercial where Cablevision (Optimum Online) is offering an "Express Lane" for users to get faster access to "the sites they visit most". Now just what does that mean? As a web worker, whose livelihood depends on fair and equal access to this crucial resource, I couldn't be more worried. A divided internet is bad for people, and it's bad for business. These companies believe they have done all the investment, but it is the American people who have invested, both through the initial development of the internet and through tax breaks for private development since. We need to speak out strongly in support of net neutrality to ensure that the full benefits of this economic miracle continue to be shared by all - citizens, consumers, small businesses, and big business.
