

Comcast's recent actions of disrupting all Bittorrent traffic are no less than an effort to create a tiered internet. I myself use Bittorrent to download Linux distributions, a perfectly legal use, and Comcast has no right to disrupt such traffic. However, it allows them to open their own content delivery services in place of the disrupted Bittorrent traffic. I feel that in order to provide usable service, the only thing Comcast should be filtering are corrupt and incomplete packets.