

As a Comcast customer I wish to comment on case WC Docket no. 07-52.

I understand and respect Comcast's desire and right to limit or even block any traffic on their network. However since this information wasn't revealed to me as a customer, and they denied it when it was discovered, I wouldn't call it "reasonable". They claim they "delayed" transmission, but in this case that essentially means canceled it without informing the consumer in any way, even when asked.

I do not ask you to require Comcast or any other provider to change their policies, but I would ask that the FCC would require them to be fully honest and disclose to consumers what they allow on their network, and not have any hidden restrictions or hidden rate caps. This will allow the consumer to vote with their money and choose a different provider when they can, without adding additional regulations.

Thank you,
William J Fritsch