

I never want to have to utter the words "I told you so," this is why I side with Net Neutrality. These days, many corporations are springing up with loose morals and business ethics and they will continue to push the envelope to see what they can get away with. Corporations are one of the most powerful forces in the world and should be setting the prime example of morals and proper business etiquette when it comes to bettering consumers lives with their products. We need to learn to put our foot down when they go too far, otherwise they will walk all over us and control what we can and can't do online.

Comcast's blatant and deceptive blocking of peer-to-peer communications is exactly the problem millions of Americans have warned would occur without Net Neutrality protections.

The FCC must take serious and immediate action to put an abrupt end to this harmful practice and prevent other Internet service providers from following Comcast's example of discriminating against the free flow of online information.

The Internet is a vital engine for economic growth, civic participation and free speech. We simply can't allow corporate gatekeepers to smother these democratic communications by discriminating against new technologies, secretly interfering with Internet traffic and stifling innovation.
