

Net Neutrality is essential in keeping America competitive in the world, economically and educationally.

Basic values of democratic diversity and entrepreneurial growth are enabled by unfettered internet access for all. If one class of people (or corporations) is privileged over another, this fundamentally distorts the spirit and principles on which our country was founded and the long term effect will be detrimental to all. It is not in the broad public interest to compromise Net Neutrality at the behest of the telcom industry.

As an agency founded to protect the public, I request that your rulings on this issue reflect the desires and concerns of that public (whose voices have been raised across our country in support of Net Neutrality).
