

To whom it may concern,

KLOVE provides quality entertainment, good moral judgements in regards to what is safe for children to listen to and for most christians, a wonderful reminder of how we should treat our fellow humanity as well as ourselves. While some folks don't necessarily tend to agree with what the content of the radio station may be promoting, I feel that the FCC should be able to help with this transition in that it practices fairly, understanding that lives are affected by these changes.

Require Community Advisory Boards - Elections for this position should be fair and precise in determining what the needs of the position require. It should not reflect a personal judgement based their own beliefs per se, however, the decisions a few individual make can either help the station or effects it's outcome on those that have enjoy the content that KLOVE has provided.

Require Additional Staffing - I am not certain as to why this is a subject of discussion. If a station has run within normal parameters in reference to how it functions, why should there be change on this issue. Radio stations are effective in saving money for itself as well as require funding to keep the radio station to function, to include cost effectiveness for the better of the industry. KLOVE is a non-profit organization that requires the charity of individuals whom listen to it. I find this function irrelevant and the FCC should be able to confirm this.

Force Many of Our Translator Stations Off The Air - The FCC should allow leniency on such subject. Yes, I agree, that monitoring processes are needed but this is becoming more obvious that there are objections to the mission of the Living Word. Not only do english speaking listeners have a right to listen to the gospel but other non english speaking Americans and abroad have that right. I believe that the FCC will make the necessary arrangements to shoulder fairness in this issue.

In closing, please understand that KLOVE has done tremendous things in my personal life. It is uplifting (how odd that a radio station can do that), it suppresses road rage (there have been many a drivers on the road that work on my last nerve like a banjo), and it's safe for children in whom their parents acknowledge the faith for the living word (I have difficulty explaining things that are expressed on secular radio stations such as sexual innuendos, cursing, etc, without having to sound like I'm ignoring them or attempt to change the subject. Kids are smart, but going around and talking like the radio station is no way to help our kids become excellent citizens in our great country.)

There is room for other belief systems, if there is a market for them, but christian radio is what it is, christianity. I contributed donations for a single purpose, to assist those who are better qualified to spread the gospel. I will not allow my money to be used to spread counterpoint views that such people such as Richard Dawkins express. Although I do agree that he has a right to freedom of speech just as everybody else does, it does not belong on christian radio. They should have their own radio station, if there is a market for it...

Take it to heart when I say "God bless you" to everybody involved in this transition. There should be no offense in this wording for when someone tells me this, I feel like I won something big. May the hand of God be with you.

In Christ,

R. Morales
