

Dear Sirs,I am writing to express my opposition to the regulatory changes being considered for radio. Once again, it appears that the government is attempting to regulate an area that today competes with the openness of the web and other media. Furthermore, this attempt will place undue burdens on radio stations and owners to provide content that may not be commercially viable.

And of course, these regulations could be used by the court happy few to challenge all sorts of programming on the basis of supposed representation or even discrimination of ideas.

I request that the commission reject this regulatory effort and leave well enough alone. With the many alternatives in media, we do not need to burden a particular medium, radio, with such regulatory red tape.

Thank you for your consideration.
