

I am very disturbed that with the concept that christian radio station must have a community group to advise it - as a christian radio station they tend to only appeal to a specific group of individuals - just like hispanic radio stations tend to only appeal to those who speak that language - therefore a "community" based group - could and would cause non-listers to be making recommendations and decisions for a group of listeners who could not and would not agree with based on their personal beliefs - in effect this would close down the freedom of speech that we currently enjoy with having christian music available - I only listen to christian music and would find this a denial of my liberties if that was taken away....
