

I am very upset at your return to a pre-broadband mentality.
We want a diversity of offerings. To require everyone to respond to the same "advisory board" seems like an attempt at "political correctness" run amuck. We are a people of diverse tastes and interests.

If you want to do something useful -- breakup the cable's (one size fits all) pricing. I would rather pay more (if necessary) to have a choice in what I receive and subsidize.

IN PARTICULAR, I GREATLY FEAR THE ATTACK ON RELIGIOUS FREEDOM THAT THIS RULING WOULD ENABLE.

No, I am not accusing anyone of a conspiracy, etc.

HOWEVER, THE FCC MUST WORRY ALWAYS ABOUT THE 'UNINTENDED CONSEQUENCES' OF ANY RULING IT MAKES.

'GOOD INTENTIONS' SIMPLE IS NOT ENOUGH!!

Instead of contraining who can speak what, allow the 'market place of ideas' to determine what does or doesn't deserve to be heard.

The greater the choice, the better. Allow me to pick 'precisely' what and when I wish to listen or watch.

At this point, I seldom watch the 'traditional' TV media because of the filth that I find there. Any 'committee oversight' is clearly not working for me.

Consequently, I must look elsewhere for what I would want to see or hear. Fortunately, that means the plethora of resources on the Internet, unless you destroy that one as well.
