

Anonymous

from businessweek.com

May 8, 2008 6:25 PM GMT

There should be a criminal investigation by the SEC for stock manipulation by the FCC. They are manipulating the stock price by making negative press releases and then when the price goes down they put out positive news about the impending merger. There will allegedly be strict restrictions on the deal if it is passed. Then they say that the deal would close by the end of the first quarter. Now they are looking at the end of the second quarter. They look to be making money on both sides of the deal. When there is allegations of illegal insider trading or illegal trading there are subpoenas signed and they get phone records, email history, and voicemail data. They are not even bothered by these blatant illegal action by the FCC to manipulate the price of the stocks down and ride the stock to big profits, allegedly. These companies are being bankrupted by the FCC's indecision and no one is stepping in. This is the longest deal to pass muster in the history of the US Government. A discretionary household expense with no non-subscribing consumer exposure is the hardest deal to decide in US History. XOM and Chevron-Texaco are commodities that consumers have no choice with.