

I am disappointed in the way my Cable Company convinced so many customers to "bundle" its services, including cable t.v., phone and high speed internet. Once the year-long commitment was up, the total cost rose from 99.00 plus taxes and fees to 145.00 monthly; I believe that paying 44.99 for Internet connection is very high - when you consider that another Internet provider offers the same service for 10.00 per month. In order to keep low-cost phone service, we are pretty much forced to stay with the expensive Internet. Just think it's a shame that they did not offer another "bundle package" after twelve months, which is what the representative told would would "most likely" happen by the end of my one-year commitment. When I asked, "will this go up in price later?" She said, "Well, by then, there will be another bundle package to take advantage of." Hasn't happened. Thanks for listening.
