

Dear Commissioners,

As a Fellow at Berkman Center for Internet & Society at Harvard University as well as someone who has worked in underdeveloped environments, I care deeply about making the Internet as available to a broad public. However, I am horrified by the this ruling, which would put the U.S. on a level with China in the realm of filtering and censorship.

I agree that availability of a free and universally available broadband service is desirable, but not at the cost of the Draconian filtering proposed in 27.1193 Content Network Filtering Requirement.

Therefore I strongly encourage you to support the first amendment and reject this ruling as currently written.

Sincerely,

Persephone Miel
