

In response to the recent PISC filing regarding potential interference to public safety and commercial operations from wireless microphones operating on channels 52 – 69, Shure offered the following defense in two articles:

“Shure says it stopped selling microphones that use the potentially troublesome frequencies in November of 2007.”

Associated Press, July 16, 2008

“Shure spokesman Mark Brunner said the company is aware of the potential interference problem from the digital transition and hasn't sold products for that spectrum since late 2007.”

Chicago Tribune, July 17, 2008

However as the attached documents demonstrate, Shure's SLX wireless microphone system is clearly capable of operating on channels 52 – 69 and is still advertised on Shure's website. SLX wireless systems are also widely available for purchase on the web. The attached brochure and product descriptions for the SLX wireless microphone system and components were taken from the Shure website on July 17, 2008.
