

Subject: Bandwidth caps (eg, Comcast 250GB/month)

Although I would agree with Comcast's right to place bandwidth caps on their accounts, I do not think it appropriate that they will not (as of yet, anyway) provide a way for a customer to check on usage. In their recent statements they indicate there are free applications available individual users can place on their computers to monitor bandwidth usage. Unfortunately, there are no such options for the millions of folks who have current generation gaming machines (XBOX 360, PS3, Wii) installed on their home networks. It is only fair and proper that Comcast, or any ISP, provide a method to track bandwidth usage.