

During a storm when the power goes out, many individuals rely on battery operated televisions or battery operated radio which pick up television audio to receive storm updates or other important information. From the www.dtv.gov website, these televisions and radios will not work after the dtv transition. This is a big safety issue. What is the FCC doing to address this concern?