

Dear FCC -- Please Listen to the People,

I am a geek and I have followed all this auctioning of the spectrum with the 700mhz auction and other blocks slowly being auctioned over the last couple of months/years along with the action FCC has taken against Comcast (thanks btw) and I only have one thing to say. What I have noticed is that companies are given all the power. Please don't let us be at the mercy of big companies, what have you given the users? 2.5ghz & 5ghz spectrum, seriously?!?!. Is this seriously enough for the next generation of internet routers/etc. Google is trying to help start a revolution here (and even willing to fund the R&D for devices) and putting internet power at the hands of the people. I would like wireless that would work all over my apartment (i live in a concrete structure). America needs to set an example that its policies and decisions are not only beneficial to big companies but the average American person & I saw that with the Comcast decision which i think will be remembered by some as how the FCC helped save the internet. Perhaps there isn't that monetary profit you might get from big corporations by selling it for billions but think of the personal satisfaction you will get by starting our revolution. The internet started not as a way to make money but just as a way to connect people (to colleges), although it evolved into something else, that fundamental basic is still in place and you can help us, the people. Please make this next leap forward & let our nation shine.

P.S. you may contact me at my personal e-mail (jojoman02@gmail.com) in case you have further questions on what the people want or if you want to talk about what the people think about all this ridiculous "interference" talk.
