

I sure hope my house or one of my neighbor's houses does not burn down. How absurd is it that the FCC allows a company to begin billing for cable services at the first closing on a house and the company will continue to collect on that property until the end of the exclusive, bulk-billed contract that may run as long as 75 years according to comments on this site????? So according to that policy the company will continue to collect even if the house burns to the ground!!!

Will the FCC ever wake up and make a ruling that gives the homeowner a fair shake????