

It's so glad to see that BrightHouse Networks, and the rest of the cable TV industry that uses exclusive bulk-billing contracts, are so patriotic. If a military person is called to overseas duty these great American companies WILL NOT turn off the cable TV - internet service while the person is gone. OH!!! The military person still has to pay for these unused services while they are risking their lives defending the right of these companies to rob the public. But just think -- if the military person returns home the cable and internet service will be immediately available. What a great benefit these contracts provide!!! It probably only cost a couple of thousand dollars to have this instant availability of services after spending a year dodging bullets.
