

There is a wide variety of programming available via the airwaves, cable, satellite, & internet. We make decisions everyday about what is suitable for our own viewing and what is not. Avoiding "R" and "NC-17" like content is not difficult with today's warnings and variety of options.

However, moral norms do evolve and as result more and more of what I personally consider vulgar creeps into "PG-13" and "PG" like content.

TVGuardian has been a wonderful product in our home. We set it to block out, for our benefit, gratuitous comments in otherwise fine programming. The technology works well enough that we count on it and in fact do not buy DVDs from certain incompatible providers.

As more programming is delivered via cable, satellite, & internet we are looking for ways to get the selectivity provided by TVGuardian. Currently we are forced to consider only media selections that meet 100% of our standards without the ability to filter out small selections in programming otherwise acceptable to us personally.

We purchase add-on boxes now to add the TVGuardian capability to our homes and would also purchase the capability as service were it to become available in other forms of distribution.
