

Public Knowledge et al. (2007)'s logical argument that text messaging should be regulated by the FCC to prevent discrimination has merit and is reasonably justified. In addition, regulation would benefit American consumers subject to other unfair business practices, such as being charged for receiving text-messages.