

For ten years or so, my family has been using TV Guardian, in the form of a two different stand alone units as well as several models of DVD/VHS players that have it installed. Without the availability of this filtering device, we would be very limited in the movies or television that we would watch. I may be in the minority, but we are not appreciative of the offensive language that is now normal on the media. If shows are sexually offensive (visually) we do not watch them. But many times a perfectly good movie (without sexual content) is interlaced with offensive language. The writers/producers feel that they must include it, which is unfortunate. TV Guardian has allowed us to expand our viewing of TV and movies, but I am unable to find the TV Guardian available in the stores like I used to. Please consider action that would help clean up the media coming into our homes.

Sincerest thanks,

Jim Downs
