

Bloomberg News reported today that there are 19.1 million unoccupied homes now in the United States.

I sure hope all of those homes are not being swindled like some of us by a bulk-billed contract for cable TV and internet services.

But just imagine if all 19.1 million homes were under the thumbs of these unscrupulous providers and their developer cohorts. If the FCC would do the right thing and make these contracts illegal, it would probably free up about $1.5 billion dollars per month that homeowners are paying for THEIR NEIGHBORS' CABLE BILLS!!!! Talk about stimulating the economy, just think what that money would do --- but alas, it appears the FCC would rather have the walls of empty houses "watch" cable TV.
