

When something hits a national scale, it's completely logical and much more efficient to nationalize it. The American people, propping up what was once the greatest economy of the world, deserve to be rewarded with greater access to the potential of education, information and social interaction that the internet has to offer. There is no greater tool for promoting Democracy and togetherness in the modern world, and no faster and better way to do it than through the nationalization of internet connections.