

Net Neutrality Essential for Human Advancement

When I started college, I was confused and troubled. I made great efforts in my personal growth and in the search for my passion, and the results are that I am now a happy healthy and driven person. What was absolutely essential in these processes was my unrestricted access to information.

I would never have been able to grow or expand my mind if I was not able to explore new ideas and areas of thought via the internet. Even with my college education, the internet added a level of information that was VITAL to my growth as a person.

Because human advancement starts on the level of the individual, and because individual growth depends on information, Net Neutrality is essential for human advancement. If extinguished, I believe we will enter a dark age.