Re: A National Broadband Plan for Our Future, GN Docket No. 09-51

Dear Ms. Dortch,

Michael Lynton says he sees nothing good coming out of the internet. Of course. What a self-centered and selfish judgement! Nothing good for fat cats who control much of the media like him. But everything good for the little guy or gal like me. Timothy Karr speaks for me in the following message. An open and accessible Internet is essential to America's future. It will help revitalize our economy, improve our education and health care, engage millions more people in our democracy and give new meaning to freedom of speech. In crafting the national broadband plan, the Federal Communications Commission must protect Internet users from corporate gatekeepers who seek to keep prices high and speeds slow, limit access to content and stifle innovations and market choice. Net Neutrality must be a basic and enforceable rule of the Internet. The plan must also ensure that every American -- regardless of their race, income or location -- can connect to broadband at prices everyone!

can afford. Allowing powerful corporate interests to dictate the future of modern communications is a mistake that cannot be repeated. Our nation's health in the 21st century requires that the FCC puts a people-powered Internet first.
