

Greetings.LPFM's are invaluable and need more power and frequency space.They have actual "skin" in the communities they serve.Nashville's LPFM is not just some leftwing tool. They have an excellent Nascar program and an Op-Ed program(called The Conflicted Hippie) that reads articles from the WSJ among other not-so-left papers.LPFM's have earned their frequency space and respect from the communities they serve -and they do SERVE their communities. Commercial stations are just that;Commercial. I listen to those stations too but when I want programs with a little more meat on its bones, Nashville's LPFM fills that need. The problem is that I have to be in just the right spot to hear them without encroachment from some other station that does not need or appreciate that little bit of spectrum....until someone like WRFN uses it. To listen to WRFN-LPFM downtown,where I live,I have to stream them online. It is good that I can do that but it is not "radio". I would like to listen in my car while driving about town. WRFN-LPFM is NO THREAT to our numerous commercial stations and WRFN happily fills the inherent mandates you require of commercial stations-and yet, they DO NOT. LPFM's are the radio stations most deserving of your considerations. It is old-school radio that broadcasts for all the right reasons - to SERVE their communities. Thanks for your time JB
