

TV Guardian has made a big favorable impact on our family viewing. While the technology was available, we had used it for all of our TV and recorded movie viewing. TV Guardian filtered out 95% or more of profane language, and it allowed us to view shows which we wanted to watch but were unsure of the language content. I later purchased a second stand alone TV Guardian unit, then a DVD player with a built in TV guardian device, even though it cost extra. The profane language in many shows limits our TV and movie viewing in our family now that the units have malfunctioned after several years' use, and repairs and new units are not available. I would gladly pay several dollars extra for TV Guardian to be offered as a built in option to a cable or satellit service. In fact, the availability of TV gauardian would cause me to choose one TV service over another, even if costing more or there was significant other advantages in the non-TV guardian option. I would also very much want TV guardian technology for internet videos and any other media choice for my family. There does not seem to be any other technology that gives us the ability to filter out profanity in real time as we view media. Please find a way to include TV Guardian-type of technology as an option for TV, internet, cell phone streaming video and the like.
