

Yes, there is too much violence on television but I believe government regulation is part of the problem and definitely not the solution. It may sound radical but I believe that current restrictions on depicting sex as well as explicit language has encouraged producers of programming to skew what they produce towards violence to gain the attention of viewers. The answer may be to ease restrictions on other subject matter to provide a larger pallet for producers to draw from.