

I am not currently a cable or satellite subscriber due in part to the inflexibility of the system in question. I have very specific interests and there are definitely channels that interest me. However, I don't want a large majority of the channels offered and the ones I do want are often in upper tier price plans. The only system that makes sense to me would be various different numbers of channels are offered at different price points. Let's say 10 premium channels that come with basic service, for example, that could be chosen through the website of any given cable provider.