

We have been on digital tv (through a rooftop antenna) since Feb.09. Prior to this we have watched analog tv for many, many years. The quality of tv through the analog signal is far and away superior to the digital signal we are now receiving. The digital signal is broken, both audio and video. We can not watch a single show without the audio being broken to the point where it is impossible to follow the story line. I figured this would correct itself after the June deadline but the problem is as bad and as consistent. Is this whole digital switch powered by the cable and satellite industry to force people to watch their industry if they want clear tv channels?? This is frustrating, never during the years of analog, regardless of the weather (major storms/wind/rain/hail/ice) we never lost the signal and we never had a broken signal. My question is - what recourse do I have to watch tv / without a cable or satellite connection/ without this frustrating broken signal. Does the government have any control over this issue. (Please understand I have bought several different digital boxes in attempt to correct the problem) Thank you, Arthur Gregory.
