

My comment relates to the inability to unlock my iPhone so I can use my choice of carriers for international calls. Even though I own the phone and have completed my contract with AT&T, I cannot get the phone unlocked, but am forced to "jailbreak" the code on a phone which could be easily unlocked through one email from AT&T to Apple. Other countries have choice of carriers and unlocked iPhones. Why is AT&T allowed to perpetuate their hold on this technology? Can't the U.S. have policies like EU countries, or must we watch them surpass us in implementing wireless in the name of "free trade" that is really monopolistic trade that costs the consumer more for cell service?
