

Commenting on the Free and Open Internet standards.

To Whom It May Concern,

I writing today to state my agreement with the FCCs direction concerning the Free and Open Internet standards, otherwise known as Net Neutrality.

Working as an IT professional anytime you inhibit a user, whether within a work environment or elsewhere, you are denying the user a choice and you put roadblocks in front of that user.

What Sen. McCain seeks to do with his "option" is to inhibit every user of the internet. Why would we want this type of input from someone who took hundreds of thousands of dollars from the TelCo industry and by his own admission, doesn't even know how to send an email.

Surely there are more qualified people to look at this, such as the FCC.

The Internet should be free and open not regulated by giant telecommunications companies and cable companies.

//s//

Theodore Ellis