

I want to thank the FCC for the earlier efforts to ensure net neutrality on the Internet. I am baffled by the efforts of the politicians to pass legislation to reverse the FCC's ruling. I have contacted by Senators and Representative to let them know my opinion. Senator Hatch's response was pure asinine political rhetoric. I appreciate the clarity of position of the FCC on this issue. I am typically against government interference in the marketplace but when most homes don't have much choice in who their ISP is, there is not sufficient competition to prevent potential gouging of customers by charging extra for delivery of popular internet content under the rubric that the ISP needs to charge more to cover additional bandwidth costs. ISPs should simply be encouraged to charge extra for users who consume extra bandwidth and not base it upon the content. Please keep up the good fight!
