

Dear Sirs,

Net Neutrality is vitally important to me as a means of conducting business and as a means of keeping my self informed. If I went to my local library and was denied access to certain books, or had to pay an extra fee to access certain fields of information, that would constitute a form of censorship. That is exactly would would be the case if you allow the telecommunication companies to manage the content of the internet. It is incumbent upon you to keep the internet open to the uncensored flow of information.

Sincerely,

Justin W. Williams
