

Large cable and telephone providers should not be allowed to be the gatekeepers of the Internet. As for profit businesses they will be motivated by profit, not the public good. They will use profit motivation to make decisions that affect access and content. The Internet will no longer be a level playing field, but belong to the rich and powerful. Cable companies have already shown that they care little about the public good when it comes to profit. Over the last three decades cable companies have done everything they can to kill off PEG access channels. If Net Neutrality is not protected by law the Internet will go the same way as public access channels have in this country.