

Since 1993 Net Neutrality has been the driving force on innovation on the internet. Some of today's productivity companies, functions and capabilities would not exist without Net Neutrality. A far greater number of similar future innovations will not happen unless the FCC takes action to protect Net Neutrality by enacting strong rules that keep the Internet free from blocking, censorship and discrimination. Strong rules must ensure that Internet service providers fully disclose any and all efforts to manage content and access.