

The driving force for business is profit, an appropriate business model if tempered with outside and objective oversight. Congress and federal agencies lost sight of this over the past two decades. A case in point is the financial industry where oversight by government agencies was neutered over the last two decades and we know the result of that fiasco. Government agencies such as the FTC have a fiduciary responsibility to protect the interests of the public. The companies seeking to neuter Net Neutrality, if allowed to do so, are more than likely to abuse that power to the detriment of the public. I urge the FTC to stand up for the public's interest.
