

Dear Sirs,

A good part of my day is consumed by the internet. I need access, unfettered access to the internet to conduct my daily business.

Should the media and communications giants get the leverage to filter and impede my daily travels on the internet, I will could be forced out of business.

My situation is hardly unique, many of my fellow countrymen are faced with the same dilemma. Please consider our plight in your proceeding and maintain net neutrality for all of us. Allowing anyone to force us to go through their "gates" as it were will in the final analysis produce the same kind of mess as we're facing at our nation's airports.

Thank you for listening and considering my comments.

Allen W. Eickstaedt